"No intimation, no trace of prejudice against Mr. Hamilin was exhibited, and I well knew that no such consideration could have influenced Mr. Lincoln in such an emergency. Had he believed Mr. Hamilin to be the man who could best promote the great work whose direction fell solely upon himself, he would have favored Hamilin's nomination regardless of his personal wishes; but he believed that a great public achievement would be attained by the election of Johnson, and I returned to Baltimore to work and vote for Johnson, although against even inferentially contradicted by Nicolay's quotation from Lincoln. On the contrary, Nicolay's statement given in his history (vol. 9, pages 72-3, and copied in another column) proves simply that Nicolay was dress parading at Baltimore and knew nothing of the President's purposes. speaker. In the same way, while he accepted with satisfaction the nomination of Lincoln by the Chicago convention of 1860, it was more from hostility to Mr. Seward, whom he had long labored to defeat, than from any tiking for Lincoln.

"This distrust of Lincoln seems to have remained in Greeley's mind to the last. The Century magazine has just published an address written by him in 1868, three years after the President's assassination, in which the feeling is plainly expressed, and the inability to understand or appreciate the intellectual greatness of Lincoln is frankly manifested.

"I saw him for a short hour," says Greeley; "about a fortnight after his inauguration; and though the tidings of Gen.
